FORGOTTEN OR IGNORED? FRONTLINE FEMINIST PERSPECTIVES ON NEGLECTED CRISES

Globally, humanitarian need is at an all time high - yet most crises are classified as "forgotten". In this session, led by women's rights organizations on the frontlines of emergency response in the Global South, we'll explore how forgotten crises are defined, and will question whether "ignored" or "neglected" are more appropriate terms. We'll discuss how the humanitarian system should use a feminist approach to respond to forgotten crises and protracted, complex, intersecting emergencies. We'll examine how a feminist approach can have a lasting impact long after the news crews have left - if they were ever there to start with.
